

An Ageing Workforce in the Wired World

Connex is a company with a large ageing workforce and a strong culture of 'how things are done around here'. Using Connex Melbourne and forest company, Veolia Environment, Robyn Archer will explore the issues of the debate that is emerging around the world – can mature age workers learn using e-learning?

- Enterprise training into the future
- Training solutions for older workers
- Is e-learning a passing phase or a paradigm shift in the way business deliver training
- Can mature age workers adapt to and utilise e-learning technologies

The Speaker:

Robyn Archer is the learning and development manager for Connex Melbourne. Over the past five years Robyn has been involved in designing education and training to assist companies to meet business objectives through the interaction of training with other business solutions. Her current focus is the design of leadership change programs, instructional networking for global business and the role of training in change management.
